The Pixies and the Lazy Housewife

By Mary Calhoun; Retold by Dali Soriano

Long ago in England, people believed in fairies. These invisible little people loved neatness. They cleaned the house of people they liked. They play tricks on lazy homemakers. Bessy was a messy housewife. She didn't want to wash the dishes. She never swept the floor of her cottage. Mice made a nest behind her broom. It was strange that the fairies did not punish her.

One summer, Bessy saw fairies in the field. Bessy pretended to be sick. She groaned, saying, "Oh, I am too sick to clean my house. Please help me." "What's the matter?" said a fairy. Bessy said, "Who is that?" A fairy replied, "It's Willy. I'll help you." "Thank you, please come home with me," Bessy said. Willy and the pixies jumped into Bessy's basket. When they got home, Bessy went straight to bed. The fairies started cleaning. They washed the dishes and dirty clothes. They scrubbed the floor and swept away the cobwebs.

The next day, Willy went to Bessy's bed and asked, "Can you get up today?" Bessy just groaned and said, "I'm still too sick to get up." So the fairies cleaned the house again. When they left, Bessy jumped and sang. "Tralalala. I have the fairies to work for me. I can stay in bed." Bessy did not know that the fairies were watching her. Willy laughed, "Hahaha, playing a trick on us? Here, take this." Willy pinched Bessy's nose. The other fairies messed up the house. They ate all the food and blew out the candles. Bessy ran out of the house, but the hill was misty. Bessy got lost. When the mist cleared up, Bessy went home. When she got home, Willy was in her house. "Get to work, lazy Bessy, or I'll pinch you," commanded Willy. When the house was clean, the fairies left. Bessy always cleaned her home after that. Willy and the other fairies might come back.
